APA format is the official writing style used by the American Psychological Association. Researchers use this style when publishing articles in professional journals. Students also use this style when writing papers for psychology and social science courses, including education and sociology. One challenge that students may face is figuring out how to cite different types of sources. A citation for a book reference, for example, will look somewhat different than that of an online source. Video content is becoming an increasingly important source of information, so how exactly would you cite something like a YouTube video or other online video in APA format? APA format for online videos is similar to that of other types of digital media and online content. The format should be: The name of the person and/or the name of the account that uploaded the video/The specific date the video was uploaded in parentheses/The title of the video in italics/The description "[Video]" in brackets after the title/The site name (YouTube) and the full YouTube URL. Some types of electronic sources need to be surrounded by brackets. According to APA's official style guide, the brackets should surround the necessary content with no spaces between the text and the brackets (like this). Because many online video creators utilize pseudonyms online, you should also include the author's screen name in brackets when relevant. It's important that the YouTube videos you cite are both reliable and up to date. According to APA guidelines, you can determine whether a source is reliable by looking at the expertise of the author and the vetting standards of the organization or group that published the video. For instance, many established organizations such as American Psychological Association (APA), the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), and the National Institutes of Health (NIH) have YouTube channels and publish videos that would be considered reliable sources. Even individual researchers or scientists may publish their research on YouTube—just be sure to do the research on the individual to be sure that the videos they post are coming directly from them (and not from someone else), and that this person is accredited or credentialed in the area of study they're presenting. Try to use up-to-date videos as often as possible to be sure you're including the most recent research in your paper. Video podcasts are another type of video format that you may want to cite. Such podcasts often feature interviews with experts, which can be a great source of unique information for your paper. If you are citing a video podcast, whether it is hosted on YouTube or published on the author's own website, use the following format: James, S. (Host). (2019, March 1). Examining the bystander effect (No. 2) [Video podcast]. In This Week in Psychology. Website. As you can see in the example above, you should begin by listing the author, then identifying them as the host of the program in parentheses. Next, include the date. After that, list the title of the episode, the episode number in parentheses, and the media type in brackets. This should then be followed by the name of the video podcast, the name of the website it was retrieved from, and the URL. Also note in the above example that the title of the video podcast is in italics. The official APA publication manual states that when written, video, or audio posts are part of an overarching work (such as a blog or podcast series), the title of the total work should be included in italics. This follows the same format that you would use if you were citing an individual chapter that was part of a book. Frequently Asked Questions What if the author's username is spelled incorrectly? Always type the creator's username or screen name exactly as it appears, including both spelling and capitalization. What if the author's full name is not listed? Include the name of the page or account that uploaded the video. Put this information at the beginning of the citation (where the author's name would go). Why is it so important to include the username? On YouTube and many other video platforms, people must publish their content under a username or screen name. While you can sometimes find a person's YouTube page by searching their real name online, you want to be sure to cite their exact username so that someone can find the video you cited. Should video content be used as a reference? That depends on the guidelines your instructor gives you. If you are unsure, ask them. But there are reasons why you might want to cite a YouTube video in your academic writing. The video may contain information not available elsewhere, it may feature an interview with an expert on a topic, or it may present unique examples that you want to reference in your paper. What about including the name of the interview subject in the reference? If the name of the person who is interviewed is not mentioned in the title of the video, do not include it in the reference. One way to refer to the interview subject, however, is to refer to them in the text of your paper, where you cite the reference. "For example, Philip Zimbardo noted that... (Psych Interview, 2013)." APA format has many different rules and guidelines for citing various types of sources, so you should always check the official guidebook to make sure that your citations and references are correct. Whenever you cite an online source—whether it's a webpage or a video—you should follow the basic rules for citing electronic sources. This includes listing the author of the video, the date, the title, and the online location of the video. Stock Market Today (7/12/22): Stocks End Lower Ahead of Major Inflation Update Energy was the worst-performing sector as U.S. crude futures sold off on worries over slowing oil demand. Stock Market Today (6/29/22): Markets Steady, but Bed Bath, Cruise Lines Tumble The calmest market day of 2022 wasn't nearly so pleasant for a few individual stocks, including retailer BBBY and cruise operator CCL. 25 Best S&P 500 Stocks of the Pandemic Bull Market Work-from-home stocks and home-improvement retailers might have been the stars of the COVID bull's first half, but they didn't finish on top. 7 Great GARP Stocks to Buy Now Growth at a reasonable price (GARP) stocks are investing's version of having your cake and eating it too. 5 Momentum Stocks to Buy as Energy Prices Soar Investors often seek momentum stocks to capitalize on a bullish trend. These five energy picks could very well fit the bill. Nasdaq, S&P 500 Hit New Highs to Start Packed Trading Week The Nasdaq and S&P 500 made their way into record territory Monday on the back of strong performances by chipmakers and energy stocks. 5 Stocks the Bull Market Left Behind Looking back over the bull market that began in March 2009, stock investors should be clinking their proverbial glasses. 7 Undervalued Stocks the Bull Left Behind These companies have lagged during the market's advance. Now it's time for them to catch up. APA style is the format that is typically required of students who are writing essays and reports for courses in psychology and the social sciences. This style is similar to MLA, but there are small but important differences. For example, the APA format calls for fewer abbreviations in the citations, but it places more emphasis on publication dates in the notations. The author and date are stated any time you use information from an outside source. You place these in parentheses immediately after the cited material, unless you have mentioned the author's name in your text. If the author is stated in the flow of your essay text, the date is parenthetically stated immediately after the cited material. For example: During the outbreak, the doctors thought the psychological symptoms were unrelated (Juarez, 1993). If the author is named in the text, only put the date in parenthesis. For example: Juarez (1993) has analyzed many reports written by psychologists directly involved in the studies. When citing a work with two authors, you should cite the last names of both authors. Use an ampersand (&) to separate the names in the citation, but use the word and in the text. For example: The small tribes along the Amazon that have survived over the centuries have evolved in parallel ways (Hanes & Roberts, 1978). or Hanes and Roberts (1978) claim that the ways in which the small Amazonian tribes have evolved over the centuries are similar to each other. Sometimes you will have to cite a work with three to five authors, if so, cite them all in the first reference. Then, in following citations, state only the first author's name followed by et al. For example: Living on the road for weeks at a time has been linked to many negative emotional, psychological, and physical health issues (Hans, Ludwig, Martin, & Varner, 1999), and then: According to Hans et al. (1999), lack of stability is a major factor. If you use a text that has six or more authors, cite the last name of the first author followed by et al. and the year of publication. The complete list of authors should be included in the works cited list at the end of the paper. For example: As Carnes et al. (2002) have noted, the immediate bond between a newborn baby and its mother has been extensively studied by many disciplines. If you are citing a corporate author, you should state the full name in each in-text reference followed by the publication date. If the name is long and the abbreviated version is recognizable, it may be abbreviated in subsequent references. For example: New statistics show that owning pets improves emotional health (United Pet Lovers Association [UPLA], 2007). The type of pet seems to make little difference (UPLA, 2007). If you need to cite more than one work by the same author published in the same year, differentiate between them in the parenthetical citations by putting them in alphabetical order in the reference list and assigning each work with a lower case letter. For example: Kevin Walker's "Ants and the Plants They Love" would be Walker, 1978a, while his "Beetle Bonanza" would be Walker, 1978b. If you have material written by authors with the same last name, use the first initial of each author in every citation to distinguish them. For example: K. Smith (1932) wrote the first study done in his state. Material obtained from sources such as letters, personal interviews, phone calls, etc. should be stated in the text using the person's name, the identification personal communication and the date said communication was obtained or took place. For example: Craig Jackson, Director of Passion Flight, stated that the color changing dresses are the wave of the future (personal communication, April 17, 2009). Keep in mind a few punctuation rules as well:
